

Medication Guidance for Adult Rheumatology Patients During Covid-19 Outbreak

The American College of Rheumatology (ACR) has developed new clinical guidance for patients with rheumatic diseases.

Maintaining your arthritis medication regimen plays an important role in keeping your disease well managed during the coronavirus outbreak.

While each patient is unique, ACR's North American Task Force has developed new medication guidelines as a framework. The taskforce members noted that "this guidance is provided as part of a 'living document' recognizing rapidly evolving evidence." The recommendations are not intended to replace the shared decision-making process between doctors and patients.

For additional details, click here.

 no known SARS-CoV-2 exposure or infection

 no known SARS-CoV-2 exposure or infection but disease is active possible or documented SARS-CoV-2 exposure or infection

KEY TAKEAWAYS

